Arizona Supreme Court strikes pension reforms

PSPRS still expected to save $475 million due to 2016 measures

ARIZONA - The Arizona Supreme Court overturned two provisions of state law designed to provide financial relief to underfunded retirement plans managed by PSPRS. The Hall v. EORP lawsuit follows a similar loss in 2014 and cements the practical and legal limits of pension reform efforts.

"The reforms struck down in recent years were the products of good faith efforts to put Arizona public safety retirement plans on a stable and sustainable path forward," PSPRS Board of Trustee Chairman Brian Tobin said. "The court's decision amplifies the importance and achievement of Proposition 124 passed into law this year. Without this key measure passed by lawmakers, Governor Ducey and the public, PSPRS-managed retirement plans, retirees, members and employers would be facing a far more uncertain future."

In Hall, the Arizona Supreme Court determined that 2011 legislative reforms that increased employee contribution rates and modest reductions to pension benefit increases were unconstitutional. The court's ruling impacts employees who were already hired or retired by the effective date of the 2011 law.

In response to the ruling, PSPRS must provide partial refunds to impacted members who under the contested law had their retirement contribution rates rise above the existing 7.65 percent level. Likewise, those who retired after the effective date of the 2011 legislation may be owed retroactive benefit increases calculated under the previous permanent benefit increase (PBI) formula.

Preliminary and unaudited estimates by PSPRS indicate that contribution refunds and retroactive pension increases could reach $220 million. The long-term adverse impacts of the Hall decision are offset by additional savings created by Senate Bill 1428 and Prop 124, both of which became law this year.

"While this ruling is unfortunate, the impacts would have been worse without the reform efforts of Prop 124 and SB1428," said PSPRS Administrator Jared Smout.

The 2016 pension reform efforts in SB1428 created a new employee benefit "tier" set for those hired after July 1, 2017, which effectively avoids the legal challenges associated with enacting laws that impact currently serving employees. In crafting Prop 124, which voters passed overwhelmingly in May, public safety stakeholders and lawmakers replaced the costly permanent benefit increase formula in the state constitution, as opposed to previous changes made in state law that were overturned in the Hall decision.

Despite the financial impact of the court's opinion in Hall, retirement plans managed by PSPRS are still expected to save an estimated $475 million in long-term costs due to changes to state law and the constitution in 2016. The combined assets of the PSPRS, Corrections Officer Retirement Plan (CORP) and the Elected Officials Retirement Plan (EORP) are currently valued at $8.7 billion.

The individual actuarial valuations for fiscal 2017-18 expected in the coming weeks will reflect pension reform efforts passed in 2011 and 2016 that mitigate the full effects of Hall but will not include the impact caused by the return of additional contributions and retroactive benefit increases. Due to the timing of the Hall ruling and the immediate lack of precise refund and benefit increase payment amounts, it is most likely that the smaller, incremental effects of the lawsuit will not be factored into individual employer funding levels and rates until the June 30, 2017, valuations are released next year.

The Who, When and How of carrying out the Hall decision

The Who, When and How of carrying out the Hall decision

The Hall lawsuit decided last week impacts certain - but not all - members and retirees of all three plans managed by PSPRS. The court's decision requires payment by PSPRS-managed plans to thousands of currently contributing members and retirees.

The largest pool of those eligible to receive money back from PSPRS-managed plans are actively contributing EORP and PSPRS members who paid the increased contribution rates mandated by Senate Bill 1609 that were struck down by the courts. A far smaller section of retirees of all three plans are entitled to receive retroactive permanent benefit increases.

Please read the following information carefully in order to determine whether you are entitled to receive payment of excess employee retirement contributions or a permanent increase to retiree benefits:

I am an active member - will some of my contributions be refunded?

- This depends upon members' hiring dates and whether they are a member of EORP (the defendant in the lawsuit) or PSPRS.
- CORP members did not have their contribution rates changed by SB1609 and therefore are not impacted by the Hall lawsuit.
- PSPRS and EORP employees hired prior to the July 1, 2011, effective date of the contribution rate increase will receive a refund of contributions in excess of the rate that was in effect when they were hired.

 Those hired on or after July 1, 2011, are not affected by the Hall lawsuit as they began their employment with the understanding and agreement of employee contribution levels that were established by Senate Bill 1609 passed in 2011.

I am a retiree - will I receive a retroactive permanent benefit increase?

This depends entirely on when a person retired.

 The Hall lawsuit impacts certain members of all three plans - PSPRS, CORP and EORP.

 Employees who retired prior to Aug. 1, 2011, are not affected by the Hall lawsuit. This class already received retroactive permanent benefit increase (PBI) payments as a result of the Fields lawsuit in 2014.

Those who retired after July 2011 may be eligible to receive retroactive benefit increases depending on when they retired.

- In order to receive a permanent benefit increase, the reinstated state law requires that a member be retired for at least two years or be retired for at least one year and be at least 55 years old by July 1 during years when investment returns are sufficient to trigger the distribution of PBIs. For the purposes of the Hall lawsuit, PSPRS-managed plans distributed PBIs in 2013 and 2014, meaning retirees must have met either the minimum retirement period and/or age criteria by July 1, 2013, or July 1, 2014, to qualify for a benefit increase under the Hall ruling.
- Importantly, all PSPRS (excluding CORP and EORP) members and retirees will be impacted by Prop 124, which voters passed in May 2016. Prop 124 replaces the current permanent benefit increase (PBI) mechanism with a cost of living adjustment (COLA) for PSPRS retirees beginning July 1, 2018.

When can I expect to receive money?

- The Arizona Supreme Court ruled against provisions of SB1609 and remanded the lawsuit to the trial court to determine how the payments will be made to members.
- PSPRS will work with the litigants to determine how the Arizona Supreme Court's opinion will be carried out.
- The process involves multiple lawsuits (Hall v. EORP and Parker v. PSPRS) and there are several outstanding issues. This includes interest determination and ultimately applying agreed upon remedies under Hall to the Parker case, which requires additional legal proceedings.
- It is not likely that impacted members and retirees will receive excess contributions or retroactive PBI adjustments before the end of the calendar year.

 PSPRS acknowledges and respects the court decision and all impacted members and retirees will receive all owed excess contributions and/or benefit increases.

I am an employer/payroll employee - Which contribution rate do I use?

- Keep using the 11.65 percent employee contribution rate (or 13 percent for EORP) until notified otherwise by PSPRS.
- The employee contribution rate for those impacted by the Hall decision will return to 7 percent for EORP members and 7.65 percent for PSPRS members upon notification by PSPRS.

Individual contribution rates now available

Individual employer contribution rates for PSPRS and CORP are now available online.

Contribution rate increases were caused primarily by short-term actuarial increases due to Prop 124 (for PSPRS) and the reduction of the assumed earnings rate in 2015 (for both PSPRS and CORP) by the Board of Trustees. The EORP rate currently remains at 23.5 percent.

Updates on the Arizona Supreme Court's Hall decision

PSPRS is aware that since the recent Supreme Court ruling in the Hall v. Elected Officials' Retirement Plan (Hall v. EORP) case, members and employers have many questions, and everyone is anxious to begin taking action in compliance with the court's ruling.

However, the legal process is not complete, and PSPRS is not authorized to take any action at this time to implement the court's decision. The parties have until December 27, 2016, to submit petitions for reconsideration of some parts of the decision that were not clear in the opinion, or were not addressed at all. The Supreme Court will issue its mandate within 15 days after the final disposition of any motions for reconsideration. The issuance of the mandate will terminate the appeal process, and return jurisdiction to the Superior Court of Arizona, which only then can address the unresolved issues. These unresolved issues involve determining a method for restoration of excess contributions and unpaid PBI, allocation and amount of fees, and the question of prejudgment interest.

In as much as Hall v. EORP was a class action, it is of note that the form of remedy for the certified class will require extensive consideration by the Maricopa County Superior Court. In addition, there is no court judgment of any kind as to plan members who were not in the certified class in Hall. They include members of PSPRS, members of CORP, and even members of EORP who were not judges or justices of the Superior Court of Arizona, the Arizona Court of Appeals, or the Arizona Supreme Court. Although the legal principles applicable to these members appear identical, the appropriate remedy, necessary steps, and time table are still undetermined. The issues to be resolved should be the same for all three plans. This process will not happen instantly, but steps are being taken to expedite the implementation of the court's decisions as quickly as possible. As such, employers should take the necessary steps to plan and prepare for needing to return affected employee contribution rates back to their lower levels when directed to do so.

State Supreme Court rules state retirement plan law unconstitutional

By: Howard Fischer, Capitol Media Services November 10, 2016, 12:07 pm

A 2011 state law requiring employees to pay more into their retirement plans is unconstitutional, the Arizona Supreme Court ruled Thursday, meaning higher future expenses for state and local governments.

In a divided ruling, the justices said that when judges took the bench they were told they would have to contribute just 7 percent of the earnings to the Elected Officials Retirement Plan. Acting Supreme Court Justice Randall Howe, writing for the majority, said that became part of their contract with the state.

What that means, Howe said, is that the state could then not unilaterally boost the judges' contribution to 10 percent in 2011 rising to 13 percent two years later, even if lawmakers said that was necessary to maintain the financial stability of the pension fund.

The case affects more than those judges who were on the bench as of 2011 when the law changed. It also means refunds of about $220 million to about 26,000 state and local police, fire fighters and corrections officers who are in other government-run pension plans that made similar hikes in employee contributions, hikes that Thursday's ruling found illegal.

What remains to be decided is how the pension funds make up the money they have to refund. They could assess the government employers retroactively or simply boost what the employers have to pay in the future to make up the lost cash.

Employees have no financial reason to let the pension funds keep the extra money. Their retirement benefits are based on a percentage of their salaries, a figure that is unaffected by how much they contributed during their working years.

Joyce Garland, the chief financial officer for the city of Tucson, said she does not know what the ruling will cost taxpayers — or when. She said when the high court struck down another change in pension laws two years ago the city was given several years to pay off the additional funds needed.

Doing nothing about the loss is not a likely option: Christian Palmer, spokesman for the three affected funds, said the ruling adds $1.3 billion in unfunded liabilities to the retirement plans which have assets of about $8 billion but liabilities of $16 billion.

Thursday's ruling drew a stinging dissent from Justice Clint Bolick, who insisted that there is no contract between the government and its workers on pension contributions. He called the concept "a work of legal fiction to which the likes of John Grisham could only aspire."

And Bolick said while Thursday's ruling "portends a huge financial windfall" for those who will get back the money, it is "a burden the taxpayers will shoulder."

As it turns out, Bolick is the only actual member of the Supreme Court to have a voice in this case.

The other four justices disqualified themselves as they were on the bench when the 2011 law was approved and have a financial stake in the issue. Bolick was appointed earlier this year; the other four who heard this case are judges from lower courts who were named since 2011. This is the second financial setback in as many years for the retirement plans. Two years ago the justices — the actual ones — struck down another provision of the same law that reduced automatic cost-of-living increases for retired judges.

At the heart of the dispute is a provision in the Arizona Constitution which said that "public system retirement benefits shall not be diminished or impaired."

Howe said that was not a problem in the 1990s when the retirement system was generating high returns. But he said decisions to invest in tech and telecommunications companies "made the plan vulnerable to major financial shocks."

By 2011, he said, the plan's assets were just 62 percent of liabilities, down from 121 percent in 1998.

That year, in a bid to fix the problem, lawmakers made two changes.

One was that now-overturned in future cost-of-living increases. Thursday's ruling involves the mandate that judges put more into the pension fund.

Two judges sued on behalf of themselves and others to strike that down.

Howe said lawmakers acted improperly.

"The law in Arizona has been clear that public employees are contractually entitled to the retirement benefits specified in their initial employment contract," he wrote for the majority. And Howe said that contract includes not just how much they get when they retire but also how much they have to pay to get those pension benefits.

Bolick, however, said even if there was a contract between the state and the judges and other employees it could be voided because was based on the "mutual mistake" of how much the retirement funds would be earning to cover the cost of future pensions.

Thursday's ruling does not affect the much larger Arizona State Retirement System with its more than 211,000 active state and local workers and teachers. Its formula requires employees to match employer contributions on a 50-50 basis, a ratio that has remained the same.
